If you kissed a masked girl in the dark and enjoyed it, how would you go about finding her again when she eluded you and slipped back among a whole bevy of dangers? Owen Moore decided upon the delightful process of trying to kiss them all until he found the right one again! Of course it would be well to explain that Mr. Moore performs this remarkable feat only on the screen. It is in "The Kiss" which is showing at the

Selling Coffee and Teas by Parcel Post or Fourth Class Mail

We buy for cash and sell for cash and are situated so that we have no rent to pay. We believe in certain advantages unobtainable elsewhere. Our goods are sold on their merits alone and do not depend upon premiums and other more or less worthless schemes to push them. By eliminating these expenses and those of delivery we can under sell competitors and as we are only looking for a small margin of profit our customers will receive the benefit.

Our other story is one pound of best English breakfast tea and two pounds of best 30c coffee for one dollar ($1) also by parcel post.

'THE MADNESS OF HELEN'

A story with an unexpected ending. The action of the play runs so smoothly and rapidly that the fifth reel will be over before you realize you are looking at the third. There is not a dull or draggy moment from the start to the finish. The two stars make one of the most pleasing and talented combinations imaginable. Both have been appearing in features with other stars lately and this is the first time in months that they have appeared together. Miss Clayton has never been given a part which called for so great a diversity of character portrayal as this one. Mr. Blackwell plays the part assigned him with forceful skill.
